Certificate III in Police Studies

Students say:

I came across many challenges and discovered new qualities about myself. The main advantage of studying Police Studies is that you get to listen to accounts experienced by officers and learn from such experiences. Another advantage of the course is that the lecturers have a keen interest in how you are going with the application process well after the course is completed.

I would definitely recommend the course to a potential recruit. It will really ignite your ambition to help you achieve the recruiting goals and mental fitness required.

This course assisted me with my transition from being retrenched to re-entering the workforce at the age of 40.... It provided a realistic perception of what a policing career would entail..... The course supported me in my areas of academic weakness and gave me many opportunities to further develop skills.

After completing school in 2000 and not going to uni or TAFE I found that doing Certificate III in Police Studies really assisted me in how to adapt to a return to a training environment. I have definitely benefited from doing the interviewing role plays as the lecturers have a sound idea of how the interview process works. All the feedback was extremely constructive and very helpful. By the end of the course you have a real passion not just about policing, but also a better understanding of the diverse community around you. The knowledge I came away with gave me confidence throughout the recruiting process. My application was successful and I am excited to be starting at the Fort Largs Police Academy in the coming weeks.

I found the course rewarding because it made me realise my capabilities. It is good to have as lecturers former police officers and other people with direct experience and experts in their field because it is so much more credible and relevant. The essence of modern policing has a lot to do with knowing how to communicate effectively and handle conflict rationally. It is not always the hardline approach that will get us where we want to be. I am so glad I did this course. There is no better preparation and now I find myself in a very good position to put in my application.
